

SEARCH FIRMS

Moneyball, released last year, tells the incredible true story of Oakland A's General Manager, Billy Beane.

Beane (played by Brad Pitt) was a human resources genius who hit upon a new method for selecting players based on data that was overlooked by other clubs. Using his unique approach he was able to spot value and quality in players who weren't thought of as particularly promising.

The results were spectacular and they found themselves as real competitors, even against the teams with exceedingly deep pockets.

There is a valuable lesson here that is relevant to the world of human resources and executive search: the most successful investors, whether in companies or people, are value investors.

Search firms enable you to make long term, valuable investments in the right people for your business. At Ambit we are skilled in knowing what to look for and where to look for it.

And when the time comes, we can help.
